ABOUT Us

Tuscany Now & More has over 36 years' experience offering personalised service, with a handpicked portfolio of over 130 luxury villas across Tuscany, Umbria, Veneto, and Lazio. Each guest has full access to our complimentary Concierge Service for pre-trip planning and in-destination assistance.

Our concierge team arranges unique experiences such as Tuscan cookery classes, immersive wine tastings, and truffle hunting, as well as additional services like private chefs and grocery deliveries – all designed to make your stay effortless while providing exclusive insider access.

For our family, hospitality has always been deeply personal. Our villas are not simply places to stay, but an invitation into the rhythm and rituals of our life, our land and our traditions. Through our wine concierge service, we love creating experiences that connect guests to the vineyards as much as the people behind every bottle. After all, wine is part of how we gather – around long tables, shared meals and meaningful conversations with family, friends and those who matter most.

TUSCANY

Central Italy - Tyrrhenian Coast - Thermal Springs - Renaissance Cities

Beyond its rolling hills and romantic scenery, Tuscany is easily recognisable as one of the world's most distinguished wine-growing regions. Not only is this the home of Sangiovese, it is the pioneering region of the Super-Tuscans, as well as organic and sustainable viticulture.

CHIANTI CLASSICO

Types of wines: Fine Sangiovese-based reds

Characteristics: Floral notes, bright acidity, subtle spices

BOLGHERI

Types of wines: Red wines, mainly Bordeaux-style blends

Characteristics: Robust wines, low in altitude with deep and rich soils

MONTALCINO

Types of wines: Red wines, mostly 100% Sangiovese-based

Characteristics: Structured and bold fruit flavours

ISOLA DEL GIGLIO

Types of wines: White wines

Characteristics: Highly saline, mineral-driven whites

Salute and welcome to Italy!

CHIANTI CLASSICO

Chianti Classico is one of Tuscany's most renowned wine-producing regions. Ancient history and millennia of viticulture have put this idyllic area of Tuscany on every wine connoisseur's bucket list. Inland Tuscany tends towards robust red wines with almost 100% Sangiovese, and that certainly applies for Chianti.

The major wine centres of Chianti today are Greve, Castellina and Radda in Chianti. Chianti Classico is held up as the noblest of the region, producing over 35 million bottles a year.

As for wineries to visit, you will be spoiled for choice. For an introduction, we recommend starting with San Giusto a Rentennano, an estate with Etruscan roots that began life as a medieval monastery and nunnery. Since 1957, the winery has remained in the same family for generations, luring visitors with its delicious Chianti Classico red wines.

BOLGHERI

The hill town of Bolgheri holds a firmly established place on Tuscany's wine map. The region's longstanding viticulture dates back to the Etruscans, long before the birth of Rome. Bolgheri's prime location, within 7km of the western Tuscan coast, means that the region enjoys a Mediterranean climate, with light, cooling sea breezes. The rise of wineries such as I Luoghi, a family-owned producer, demonstrate the role that smaller wineries are playing in this popular wine region.

TUSCANY

"Far removed from large-scale industrial production, the winery focuses on expressing the character of its land through Bordeaux varieties, especially Cabernet and Merlot. The wines balance the warmth and richness of the coast with a freshness and elegance."

LUIGI MAGNOLFI

"Like Bordeaux, Bolgheri is relatively low in altitude, with deep, rich soils and close proximity to the sea – which raises temperatures and ensures strong solar radiation. Those are all the ingredients needed to produce grapes suitable for world-class wines."

MONTALCINO

Surrounded by Medieval fortresses, Montalcino is located in southern Tuscany in the province of Siena. This bucolic Tuscan town is known around the world for its red wine – the feisty, oak-aged Brunello di Montalcino DOCG.

In fact, it's one of Italy's great wine towns, steeped in tales and legends. Made exclusively from Sangiovese grapes grown in the surrounding hills, the wine is dry, powerful, bursting with fruit. It is restrained by a level of acidity and structure that allows it to age and evolve for many years.

Of its 250 wineries, Costanti is one of the finest estates in Montalcino, producing very high-quality Brunellos that are elegant and robust.

ISOLA DEL GIGLIO

Venture to Giglio Island to discover a treasure trove of coastal vineyards.

Just 11 miles off the Tuscan coast – and spanning around 21 km² – the island's winemaking history starts with Ansonica. Under Medici rule, viticulture flourished across Tuscany, including on Isola del Giglio, where Ansonica has long been cultivated by hand.

This meticulous level of craftsmanship is being kept alive today by a group of fiercely dedicated winemakers.

Despite tough conditions, Fontuccia is one winery that's taking the lead. By restoring old, abandoned vineyards, the Rossi brothers are continuing to produce the island's traditional Ansonica wine, preserving a winemaking heritage that once was on the verge of disappearing.

"The wines [of Fontuccia] convey the island's wild soul. The star of the show is Ansonica, expertly vinified to enhance its saline character and aromas of Mediterranean herbs, balancing drinkability and character."

UMBRIA

Central Italy - Medieval Hilltop Towns -
Unspoiled Nature - Hearty Cuisine

Umbria is synonymous with Italy's verdant hills and sprawling vines, yet it remains off the beaten track compared to Tuscany. By eluding the spotlight, Umbria feels all the more authentic and undiscovered. No trip to Italy's 'Green Heart' is complete without sampling the region's exquisite, crisp, dry whites like Grechetto and rich red wines like Sagrantino – true Umbrian staples. Small medieval towns such as Todi, Orvieto and Spoleto offer a wealth of culinary and wine-focused surprises to look forward to.

ORVIETO

Once favoured by the upper classes of Imperial Rome, Orvieto produces one of Umbria's best wines. Indeed, the straw-coloured and white wine was so popular amongst society's generals, senators and emperors, they would import barrels of it to be brought down the River Tiber to the capital. Orvieto is just as popular today, enjoyed all over the world for its zesty-mineral notes and fresh acidity. Look out for the Orvieto Classico DOC mark on the label, which indicates if the wines are from the historic growing zone. Small, boutique wineries are scattered across the region; visit Barberani in the hills of Umbria for a taste of a top-quality Umbrian white.

MONTEFALCO

Set among undulating vineyards, Montefalco is located 30 miles southeast of Perugia, the regional capital of Umbria. Images of olive groves that tumble down gentle slopes are synonymous with this sweeping Umbrian wine region. It is best known for producing Sagrantino, a bold red wine that's packed with intense flavours and a powerful character. For a taste of Sagrantino at its finest, head to Terre di Capitani in Colle di Fontivecchie, a subterranean winery located 400m above sea level, tucked beneath the Penacchi family home. Paolo Bea is another estate worth visiting to taste Sagrantino, where organic hand-crafted wines take centre stage.

VENETO

COLLI EUGANEI

Just beyond the outskirts of Venice, Colli Euganei's volcanic landscape is made up of emerald cones, domes and one of the largest thermal basins in Europe. The slow, gradual formation of ancient seabeds led to limestone-rich soils, while later volcanic activity added volcanic soils – playing a vital role in shaping the structure of the region's wines. For a taste, visit Ca' di Lista in the Colli Euganei hills – a prestigious wine estate producing some of Colli Euganei's world-renowned wines. Central Italy – Coast and Mountains –
Volcanic Landscapes – Roman Heritage

Italy's central region, Lazio, isn't as well known as Tuscany globally, but that's part of its appeal. Home to the country's capital, Rome, Lazio's viticulture history dates back to the sixth century B.C. with the Etruscans, who planted vines that thrived in hills of volcanic soil amidst the mild climate and Tyrrhenian Sea breezes. Today, the Cesanese grape plays an important role in Lazio's wine identity, with innovative winemakers honouring time-old traditions. By applying modern sustainable practices, Lazio's longstanding viticulture continues to evolve and live on

THE WINES OF CALIFORNIA & ITALY:

How do they compare?

How are the wines of California and Italy connected? Whether you're visiting Napa Valley, Veneto or the wild Tuscan coast, these two wine zones have more in common than you think. Climate and geography play a vital role as much as the family-run winemakers running the show. Here, our expert winemaker, Gio Stella, talks through the main characteristics, flavours and profiles that connect Californian and Italian viticulture. Discover a taste of both, from the sumptuous wines and sunny climates of Paso Robles and Valpolicella to the climatically similar regions of Walla Walla and Val d'Orcia.

Napa Valley x Bolgheri

"Napa and Bolgheri are warm and very bright, with cool, rich soils."

2.

Paso Robles x Valpolicella

"The wines of these two terroirs share – albeit for different reasons – great structure, deep fruit flavours, smoothness and warmth."

3.

Walla Walla x Val d'Orcia

"These two ecosystems are home to diverse grape varieties, which in both areas, are planted based on the vastly varying soils."

Sonoma x Chianti Classico

"The common thread that unites these distant territories is in the texture of their wines – always defined by a vivid freshness, savoury nuance and crispness. They're wines that prefer to be elegant rather than powerful – that whisper rather than shout."

5.

Willamette Valley x Casentino Mugello

"Pinot Noir and Chardonnay are among the most demanding grape varieties we know – arguably the most sensitive in terms of microclimate. They thrive in cool climates."
